West Richland's Lewis & Clark Ranch could add 100,000 residents when it's developed over the next 20 to 100 years.

Big, bold vision could reshape West Richland

WEST RICHLAND, WA

A bold vision to develop West Richland's sprawling Lewis & Clark Ranch into an urban area could add nearly 100,000 people to the rural city over the next 20-100 years.

The heirs of the late Frank Tiegs, an influential Pasco potato and real estate visionary who died in 2024, hit a major milestone this month.

Thursday, West Richland released the draft of an environmental impact statement that gives three options to develop Lewis and Clark Ranch, the 7,600-acre crown jewel of Tiegs' real estate empire.

The 1,073-page document, called a DEIS, is required under Washington's State Environmental Protection Act.

The city kicked off the review in 2022. Once adopted, it will shape growth for generations to come.

IMPACT IS HUGE

At its heart, the document offers options to guide the process of transforming irrigated farm circles into a mix of housing types, retail, business, commercial and public spaces, including schools, parks and open spaces.

"The impact is huge, but in a good way," said Eric Mendenhall, director of the city's planning, parks and economic development division.

BUSY NEIGHBORHOOD

It's no secret West Richland is a hotbed for residential construction. There are two major developments in progress near the Lewis and Clark Ranch property.

The Heights at Red Mountain Ranch is a 184-acre development south of Ruppert Road, near the ranch. It includes 558 homes, 226 apartments and is 75% developed.

The Bluffs is a 104-acre property that will feature 406 single family homes northwest of The Heights. The city gave preliminary plat approval in May.
